Introduction

Privately tucked away 25 miles southwest of Redding, California, awaits the 635 ± acre Hope's Ranch in Tehama County. Secluded on the top of a hill with expansive 360-degree breathtaking views of the Trinity Alps, Mount Shasta, Mount Lassen, and Yolla Bolla Mountains, stands the single-story custom-built 2,092 square foot home with modern conveniences.

Whether you're actively involved in livestock agriculture or not, there is something here for everyone. The ranch is currently used for organic grass-fed beef rotationally grazed. With cross-fencing and multiple water troughs throughout, you can rotate and have the cattle make the best use of the plentiful grass, but the property can also be utilized as a private estate, the land could be leased out for winter grazing land, or for other potential income-generating opportunities.

The ranch has plentiful water for drinking due to the excellent aquifer. There are two large reservoirs, two smaller seasonal reservoirs, and seasonal creeks. There is a main well with 50+ GPM production, a solar well that pumps 5-12 GPM, two 2,500-gallon and two 5,000-gallon water storage tanks.

Spend time in the great outdoors with trail hiking, biking, running, equestrian trail riding, atv'ing on the gravel ranch roads that traverse the property - all right out your front door. “The Williamson Act, also known as the California Land Conservation Act of 1965, enables local governments to enter into contracts with private landowners for the purpose of restricting specific parcels of land to agricultural or related open space use. In return, landowners receive property tax assessments which are much lower than normal because they are based upon farming and open space uses as opposed to full market value.” – from the California Department of Conservation
