History of Oak Brook Ranch

The history of Oak Brook Ranch is a tale of vision, hard work, and dedication that spans nearly half a century. It all began in 1976 when the property was brought to the attention of Richard Wagner. Richard, inspired by his upbringing as a farm boy in Wisconsin, longing to return to the land after a successful career as a US Air Force pilot and stockbroker, sought a parcel of land from Orange County to Monterey County. The land had previously been owned by a Japanese business with plans for a private golf course.

Undeterred by the lack of any manmade structures, water or power sources, Richard Wagner saw potential in the untouched landscape and set out to transform it into a thriving ranch and recreational compound for his family. One of the first challenges was securing water. Richard hired a “water witcher” to locate the best location to dig a well and had to go just over 100 feet below the surface to get a residential flow where the well is located.

Richard then began to shape the land, starting with the basic infrastructure. A single-wide mobile home was then placed on the property, serving as temporary housing for hired Cal Poly Ag students who assisted in putting up much of the barbed wire fencing in exchange for lodging. Richard purchased a gasoline powered generator and propane tanks to provide power sources. The students and family members were all part of the labor pool staying in the mobile home as needed during various construction projects.

Over time, infrastructure including a pole barn was built and various pieces of equipment purchased, vehicles like bulldozers and ATVs that were used to develop most of the network of ranch roads and amenities. Rainwater collection ponds were dug out and areas specially fenced to manage cattle grazing. The family originally owned a cow calf herd but eventually leased out the ranch. A circular corral is down below the house and a small rectangular one with a chute near the barn.

Eventually the main hacienda was built with the assistance of a Cal Poly architectural student who supervised much of it as part of his senior project. At first there was only an attached garage with 3 bedrooms, and 2 baths but later 2 more bedrooms and a bath, and additional features such as a pool, spa, tennis court, separate garage, carport, and landscaping were added. An automatic gate with keypad access was also added for ease and privacy. Caretakers played a crucial role in maintaining the property over the years, and the original caretaker's quarters has been replaced with a second double wide manufactured home and has an attached porch, a separate carport and storage sheds.

The barn evolved to include horse stalls, a small tack room, tool bench and equipment areas with log splitter, sit on lawn mower, tractor, Jeep, Polaris and 4-wheeler ATV stalls. There are 2 large 5,000-gallon water towers with emergency fire department collection draws and there is capacity for additional storage tanks. Recently, the ranch transitioned to solar power for most of its power source, supported by PG&E and propane.

Ultimately, the ranch, a labor of love for the family, is now being passed on to new owners, marking the end of an era filled with memories and hard work.

Spanish Style Home

The centerpiece is a charming 1980 stucco Spanish-style home with a tile roof, featuring five bedrooms and three baths, living area with fireplace, bar, dining room and kitchen. The main hacienda invites relaxation with a swimming pool, spa, and tennis/basketball court. A large solar array provides supplemental power to the property. In addition to the main hacienda, there's a double-wide caretaker house on the property.

Facilities & Improvements

The ranch features a barn with a small saddle room, two horse stalls, two corrals, a shop with a tool bench and equipment areas with log splitter, lawn mower, tractor, Jeep, Polaris, Quad, industrial tow trailer, golf cart, chain saw, air compressor and assortment of hand tools to aid in ranch operations and maintenance. The property recently underwent a transition to solar to provide supplemental power along with PG&E and propane. An automatic gate with keypad access at the property entrance provides ease and privacy.

These amenities and improvements have enhanced the functionality, comfort, and sustainability of Oak Brook Ranch over the years, contributing to its value and appeal as a desirable property.

Outdoor Activities & Recreation

The early creation of dirt roads using bulldozers and vehicles improved access throughout the property. Outdoor enthusiasts will revel in the miles of 4-wheel drive backroads, expansive vistas, rock formations, meadows, horseback riding, hiking, and hunting opportunities for deer (Zone A), upland game, and pigs.

Water & Livestock Grazing

The well on the ranch yields a residential flow at just over 100 ft deep. Two large 5,000-gallon storage tanks ensure ample supply for various needs, along with emergency fire department collection draws. There are multiple seasonal catchment reservoirs for cattle grazing as well as the capacity to add additional storage tanks.

The ranch is cross-fenced and traditionally grazed and offers a seasonal opportunity to run 50-60 yearlings providing income potential and fire management.
